Phonological Pitfalls for English Teachers in Korea:
The Importance of Understanding Contrastive Phonology

By Steve Garrigues, Ph.D.

An essential element of effective spoken communication is “good” pronunciation. And “good pronunciation” effectively means avoiding miscues and ambiguity. Each language has its own phonological structure which contrasts with that of all other languages, and which creates unique problems in the accommodation of English sounds. The end result of conflicting sound distinctions is often miscommunication. For example, what a difference a single sound contrast can make between saying “That’s the long way” and “That’s the wrong way.” Or consider how often the question “Will you live here?” has been misunderstood for “Will you leave here?” in Korea. What a difference a single vowel sound makes! From a communicative point of view, the aim of achieving “good English pronunciation” for EFL learners should NOT be to sound like some kind of native English speaker (and which NS model should one aspire to emulate anyway?). Rather the goal should simply be to communicate effectively with minimal ambiguity and confusion. This means being able to distinguish and produce sounds in the target language (English) that may not be distinguishable in the primary language (Korean in this case).

All EFL teachers in Korea, whether Korean or native-speaker, realize that there are certain sounds that cause Korean students more trouble than other sounds. But there are other issues that may not be so apparent, which tend to be overlooked by many English teachers. And there are underlying reasons for all pronunciation problems, which lie in the phonological structure of the two languages. Many of these are what we may call “phonological pitfalls” because they are often unexpected and unrecognized by Korean English teachers and NESTs alike.

An understanding of Korean and English contrasting phonology can help identify the underlying causes of specific pronunciation issues, and offer practical approaches for teachers in guiding their students to master those sounds. This presentation takes a practical approach to dealing with: (a) why there are problems with specific English sounds for Korean speakers, and (b) how to approach the teaching of English pronunciation for Korean speakers.

The Presenter

Dr. Steve Garrigues holds the position of Professor at Kyungpook National University in Daegu, where he has been teaching since 1986. He is also an adjunct professor with UMUC Asia and has been teaching classes in anthropology, sociology, and Asian studies since 1985. He did his BA in Japanese history at Sophia University in Tokyo, and both his MA (Colorado State University) and PhD (Lucknow University, India) are in cultural anthropology. Most of his life has been spent in the Asia-Pacific region, including 8 years in Japan, 4 years in India, 6 years in Tonga, and over 25 years in Korea. His research interests are in intercultural communication, comparative semantics, and ethnomusicology. In addition to his academic work, Steve is a passionate photographer. He has been a member of KOTESOL from its very beginning.

The NEAT: Background, Practice, and Consequences

This presentation is an exploration into the new English test that will theoretically be replacing the English portion of the KSAT in 2015, the NEAT (National English Aptitude Test). It will start by looking into why the government decided to change to this new test, and then look at the individual components of the test and what this test will mean for us as English teachers. This presentation will be a mix of lecture and workshop, with audience participation actively encouraged.

The Presenter

Brad Serl is from British Columbia, Canada. He graduated from Thompson Rivers University in 2001 and came to Korea in early 2002. He has worked at private language schools, public high schools, and universities, and currently works as a coordinator at Busan University of Foreign Studies in their teacher training program. He has been happily married since 2002 and enjoys mountain biking, cooking, and all manner of geekery. Brad is currently President of the Busan-Gyeongnam Chapter of KOTESOL and Chair of the 2012 KOTESOL National Conference Committee.

About Korea TESOL and the Gwangju-Jeonnam Chapter

Korea TESOL, also known as KOTESOL, is a professional association of teachers of English to speakers of other languages. The nationwide organization has been serving English teachers, administrators, and interested individuals in the field of English education since 1992. KOTESOL has ten active chapters across the nation and holds annual national and international conferences. The Gwangju-Jeonnam Chapter has monthly meetings, usually the second Saturday of the month, which contain two one-hour presentations or hands-on workshops on topics related to English language teaching, such as classroom methodology, activities, and management. Meetings are presently being held at Chosun University in Gwangju. Admission to Chapter meetings is free, but we encourage your participation as a full member. (Membership information is on page 2.)
